

Contest 2E

Get creative and scare up a winning sheet costume

Jupiterimages

TODAY'S AGENDA

There's no play like 'Home'

Jubilee Theatre in Fort Worth begins its 30th anniversary season by revisiting Samm-Art Williams' Home, which debuted at the theater in 1983. Home follows the story of a young black man from South Carolina through imprisonment, drug addiction and his return home. Previews for this production, directed by Sharon Bengé, begin at 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday, with 3 p.m. matinees Saturday and Sunday. The weekend preview tickets cost $10; prices vary for the run of the show. Through Oct. 31 at 506 Main St., Fort Worth. To purchase tickets, call 817-338-4411 or visit www.jubilee-theatre.org.

'Snow White and the Seven Dwarves'

There's no point being grumpy, bashful or sleepy 'cause Snow White and the Seven Dwarves is coming to Casa Mañana, starting Friday, as a big musical show. You've got your evil queen, the lovely heroine (as played by Mary McElree, who recently appeared in the theater's production of Les Misérables) and those other dudes. It runs through Oct. 17. $16-$18. 817-332-2272; www.casamana.org.

Culture shop

How many cultural organizations want you? Find out Saturday when more than 100 local cultural entities set up shop in Dallas' NorthPark Center to try and woo you and yours into their membership ranks. Theaters, symphonies, museums, ballets, choruses, film festivals and more will sing and dance to get your attention at ArtsPark. Think of it as a cultural shopping op. Free. 10 a.m.-9 p.m. at NorthPark Center, 8687 North Central Expressway, Dallas. www.northparkcntr.com

Have an item for Agenda? Send it to listings@star-telegram.com.

WHAT'S AHEAD

Columbia Pictures

FRI Find out if our critic will make new friends with his review of the Facebook movie The Social Network In Weekend

SAT We take a tour inside this fall's big designer show house in Fort Worth In Your Life

SUN It's time to head south for the Austin City Limits festival In Your Life, Arts & Travel

Members of Aradhana Dance Company of Fort Worth performed Sunday at Sri Krishna Lila: A Dance and Drama Musical Evening at Will Rogers Auditorium. Special to the Star-Telegram/Richard W. Rodriguez

Dancing between worlds

Ranna Jani, right, and Ami Jani encourage Jay Trivedi, 10, before a performance. Special to the Star-Telegram/Richard W. Rodriguez

Ranna Jani founded her Fort Worth dance company in 1992 to keep her children in touch with Indian culture. Special to the Star-Telegram/Richard W. Rodriguez

By Alison Ward

award@star-telegram.com

Backstage at Will Rogers Auditorium, it's sensory overload. The narrow hallways are teeming with kids of all ages wearing elaborate costumes in lime green and bright blue, hot pink, electric orange. Their voices bounce off the tile as they chatter, adorning themselves and each other with the trappings of traditional Indian dance — tying on elaborate headwear, slipping heavy bracelets over their wrists, placing colorful bindis on their foreheads and draping beads and shiny necklaces, one after the other, around their necks.

They jingle lightly as they walk, their costumes covered with beads and tiny mirrors. Then they abandon their backpacks full of jeans and T-shirts, kick off their Crocs and flip-flops, and pad barefoot to the stage

More on DANCE, 4E

Thoroughly American Metroplex kids explore their Indian heritage in a traditional and colorful way

Ami Jani, daughter of Aradhana Dance Company founder Ranna Jani, now teaches alongside her mother. Special to the Star-Telegram/Richard W. Rodriguez

Fort Worth 'Super' hero makes an unforgettable impression

Ron White, right, takes part in a memory challenge on Superhumans. History

Ron White's amazing memory skills draw the interest of a show on the History channel.

By David Martindale
Special to the Star-Telegram

Ron White has been known to misplace his keys from time to time. He also occasionally forgets about monthly bills that aren't set up for AutoPay.

But when White sets his mind to remembering, there is no one better.

"If I use a memory system, I'll put my memory up against Rain Man," the Fort Worth resident says. "I'll compete with anybody in the world."

White is the nation's reigning

Stan Lee's Superhumans

9 p.m.
Thursday
History

memory king, with back-to-back titles at the USA Memory Championship. He holds national memory records. His recall skills are so remarkable, in fact, that the History channel has declared him to be "super human."

He is profiled on Stan Lee's Superhumans, a show that scours the globe for extraordinary people with extraordinary abilities. It airs at 9 p.m. Thursday.

Unlike many of Stan Lee's fa- More on MEMORY, 4E

Dance

Continued from 1E

for rehearsal.

"1-2-3-4-5-6-7-8, and then turn around, then we go all the way to the back!"

"1-2-3-4, then we do the diamond."

"You slide out that way. No, that way?"

Their teacher, Ranna Jani, her long hair loosely braided down her back, floats through the chaos of her groups practicing in the close quarters of backstage. She's mothering her dancers, tying on parts of their costumes, answering their questions, kissing their cheeks. She is unrushed, not betraying a single moment of nervousness or distraction.

"Can I get all the minors over here?" she calls out — not loudly, not forcefully, but the kids hear her and follow. Immediately, the smallest ones separate themselves from the tangle of giggles and costumes and circle around.

Balancing act

The dancers, all of Indian origin, live in cities all over the Metroplex. They were born in the United States, part of the first or second American-born generation in their families. But their parents, wanting them to maintain a connection to India in their all-American lives, have involved them in Jani's Aradhana Dance Company to learn the traditional dances of Gujarat, the Indian state where many of their family members still live.

On this Sunday afternoon, the dancers are performing at a fundraiser for a new Hindu temple in Fort Worth. There are opening prayers, dances, a play that celebrates Lord Krishna. Meanwhile, there's a gun show next door in the exhibit hall and, a few buildings over, a world-chamampionship miniature horse show. It's East meets West, a blending of cultures and lifestyles. It represents the sort of balance that Jani has been striking for decades, since she and her husband, Rajni Jani, moved to Texas from India — the same balance she is helping her young dancers find in their own lives.

Ami Jani helps students rehearse before Sunday's performance at Will Rogers.

Special to the Star-Telegram/Richard W. Rodriguez

Jani has always danced, but she got serious about teaching 20 years ago when her son Alap was 8. She started teaching him, and in 1992, she founded Aradhana and started accepting more students. Today, parents find her by word of mouth, enrolling their kids from as far away as Plano. And her dance teams have become known for winning big at the biggest annual national competition.

Every summer, Gujarati organizations from across the United States send dance teams to the Raas, Garba and Folk Dance competition hosted by FOGANA, the Federation of Gujarati Associations in North America. At the July competition — the 30th annual contest — dance groups from across the country gathered in Richardson, where Jani's students won in several categories, beating out teams from places such as New York and Charlotte, N.C. It's part of a winning tradition for Jani, who has become sort of a celebrity in the Indian dance world. Almost every year, her students win for dancing, for choreography, for costumes.

A matter of choice

The group's strength is Raas dances, folk dances that depict stories and celebrate Krishna, and that's mostly what they're performing at Will Rogers. Jessica Bhandari, 15, considers it the Hindu version of, say, a Christmas play that might celebrate the birth of Jesus. Dancers move constantly across the stage, pairing off and moving into elaborate formations. They up the visual excitement with dandiya, lightweight sticks that they twirl, toss and hit together to reinforce the rhythm.

Backstage, Maitry Shah is leading three boys around, one of whom is her 9-year-old son, Dilan. Dilan and his older sister are the second generation of the Shah family to be born in the United States; their mother grew up American, too. But she learned to do traditional dances when she was a child, and she wanted her kids to have the same connection to the family roots, even though so much of their lives are thoroughly American.

"These kids were born and raised here," Shah says. "They do taekwon do and karate and sports — and then they do this." This year, she was impressed that her son and his friends chose to devote their summer to a heavy schedule of dance practices, giving up camps and other activities.

"Nobody's doing it because somebody told them they have to do it," she says. "They understand the commitment and what it involves."

Jani's students have practiced in warehouses and community centers. Before the family added a studio to the back of the house, the dancers arrived at 6 a.m. on summer mornings to practice in the back yard before the heat became unbearable. They perform at community gatherings, arts festivals, fundraisers. And they work hard, especially in the spring and summer, when they prepare for the FOGANA competition.

'A physical connection'

After all these years, Ranna Jani never has charged for the lessons. Students pay for costumes and contest registration fees, but the lessons are free.

"I could have [charged], but I felt like I was doing community service," she says.

Besides that, it's a personal mission for Jani. She has danced since she was a child. "I think it's in my blood," she says. "All my sisters did it, my mom did it." In 1978, when she left India to join her new husband in Texas, they planned to go home after three or four years. Instead, they stayed: Jani found herself falling in love with American life and learning how to build a life that embraced both her native country and her new home.

Early on, she realized that some of her friends' children were embarrassed about their cultural identity.

"Their kids told them, 'Mom, don't dress Indian when you come to school to pick me up,'" she says. "I didn't even have kids then, but that's when I decided: I'm not going to have my kids be ashamed of being Indian."

When her son Alap was old enough to appreciate the culture lesson, she started teaching him traditional Indian dance. Then she started teaching other kids, founding her dance company out of her Overton Park home. Now there are dozens of kids learning dance at any given time. Many of them start when they're 5 or 6 years old and continue through high school, taking their skills with them to college to join dance groups at their universities and making Indian dance a lifelong connection to their heritage.

The next generation of Janis has carried on the tradition. By the time Alap Jani went to college, he was hooked: He founded a student dance team at Stanford that is still going strong, even though he has gone on to medical school and started his residency. (The team's called Basmati Raas, a play on the basmati rice that's common in Indian dishes.) And Ami Jani, who has been dancing since before she started school, has turned her passion for the arts into a lifelong pursuit. She graduated this year from Washington University in St. Louis, where she majored in international studies and minored in dance — and now she's using her knowledge of cultures and dance to help her mother teach and operate the dance school.

"It's hard not to be completely assimilated into the culture," Ami Jani says. "The only way to be proud of a culture is to feel like you're part of it. By knowing how to do these traditional cultural dances, you feel like you're part of that culture. You have a physical connection to it."

In high school at Fort Worth Country Day School, Ami Jani was the only Indian in her class, but she shared so much of her heritage, she says, that her closest friends became "fairly good experts on Indian culture." There were henna parties for her birthday, Indian dancing at school talent shows, a Bollywood-themed junior prom and the sense of sharing among friends with different backgrounds. And the Janis have taken their children to India many times, letting them absorb the place and the culture and get to know their extended family.

"I'm very grounded in my American background," Ami Jani says, "so I don't think I could ever live anywhere but the United States. But I'm still proud of my heritage — both sides."

World movement

Onstage at Will Rogers Auditorium, it's a flurry of color as the dancers move as a group, twirling bodies, jingling costumes, flashing bracelets and necklaces, their bare feet slapping against the scuffed stage. For the finale, 16 dancers fill the stage, shimmering and sparkling in the stage lights.

When it's over, they file back into the dressing rooms, breathless, grabbing small bottles of water and blurring out where they messed up, when their jewelry almost fell off, who accidentally dropped their sticks. And when they leave the dressing rooms, they've changed back into Dallas Cowboys and Texas Longhorns T-shirts and they're fiddling with their cell phones. They've left their costumes behind to slip seamlessly back into American teen culture. It's an effortless transition, and it's one they'll be able to make all their lives.

Alyson Ward, 817-390-7988

Ranna Jani and daughter Ami Jani.

Special to the Star-Telegram/Richard W. Rodriguez

Who Says
You Have to Look Your Age?
Botox®, Collagen & Sclerotherapy Injections
Pixel® Fractional Skin Resurfacing
Photo Rejuvenation
Medical Micro-Dermabrasion
Free Skin Care Consultation
Financing Now Available!
1.800.SKIN CARE
www.euroskincare.com
Fort Worth
817.731.0707
30 Year Anniversary!
Voted Best Day Spa 2010

Rain Damage Sale
UNBELIEVABLE PRICES ON ALL FABRIC, FURNITURE & MORE
30% to 50% Off Store Wide
Not all fabrics are damaged, but ALL ARE ON SALE!
Items originally $30 per yard as low as $1 PER YARD.
Hurry in for best selection!
Sale ends Saturday, October 30, 2010
Fine Furniture • Decorative Fabrics • Design Studio • Since 1976
Monday - Friday 8 to 6 Saturday 9 to 4 www.ilovejd.com

J&D Interiors, Inc.
2015 N. Main
Fort Worth, TX 76164
817-626-2365

ravemotionpictures
For Showtimes at Ridgmar 13,
Fort Worth Call 817-566-0025
For Showtimes at N. East Mall 18,
Hurst Call 817-591-8540
Or Visit www.ravemotionpictures.com

Life and Death at the Fiery Pool

WITH MARY E. MILLER

A Free Friday Evening Lecture AT THE KIMBELL ART MUSEUM October 1, 6 PM

With particular attention to the jade-rich tombs of Tikal, Guatemala, and the extravagant and beautiful paintings of Bonampak, Mexico, Miller will look at moments of transition in Maya rulership.

Kimbell Art Museum

3333 Camp Bowie Boulevard • Fort Worth, Texas 76107 • 817-332-8451 • www.kimbellart.org

Promotional support provided by American Airlines Star-Telegram

Panel with a seated ruler in a watery cave (Cancuen Panel 3), 795, Cancuen, Guatemala. Limestone, 22 1/2 x 26 1/4 x 3 in. (57.5 x 66.5 x 7.6 cm). Ministerio de Cultura y Deportes—Museo Nacional de Arqueología y Etnología, Guatemala City. Courtesy Peabody Essex Museum, photograph © 2009 Jorge Pérez de Lara

Memory

Continued from 1E

mous Marvel Comics superheroes, the origin story behind White and his amazing memory does not involve anything as exotic as being bombarded with gamma rays, getting injected with a "super-soldier" serum or emerging as an evolutionary mutant.

White, 37, merely attended a memory seminar at age 18, discovered a knack for remembering massive amounts of information and then honed his skills with lots of practice, practice, practice.

"My memory is actually no better than anyone else's," he says. "We all have this ability. But most people, over 90 percent of the people, aren't tapping into it, because they don't know how."

White is so tapped in that he has turned memory into a full-time job.

He speaks at conferences and seminars all over the county — last week: Dallas, San Diego and Washington, D.C.; this week: Seattle and San Francisco — and he teaches others to implement his memory techniques for greater success in their professional and private lives.

"When people see me memorize a 100-digit number or remember 200 names in an hour, they're amazed, and I'm glad that they are, because that gives me a way to make a living," he says. "But for me, it's not really about being a performer; it's about teaching memory strategies that can benefit everyone."

His national records include being the fastest to memorize a deck of cards (he was timed at 87 seconds) and memorizing the most numbers in five minutes (167 digits).

White's parents and childhood friends still marvel, he says, that he has been able to do this with his life. As a kid growing up in North Richland Hills, he showed no signs that he could one day become known nationally as "The Memory Guy."

"I basically got kicked out of college because of bad grades," he says. "I went to the University of North Texas and dropped out with a 0.9 GPA. So when I told my parents at 19 that I was going to be a memory guy and that I was going to make a career of it, they were like, 'Oh, my God, no. Don't do that.'"

"Now, of course, they say: 'We knew you could it. We were with you the whole time!'"

As if there's a chance of his forgetting how it really happened.

On the History channel show, host Daniel Brown-ing Smith (who is also a so-called Superhuman, a con-tortionist known as "The Most Flexible Man Alive") subjected White to three memory challenges.

He passed them all. For the final challenge, Smith and White walked the aisles of an Austin-area Home Depot with a shopping cart. When they pulled items off the shelves, White would commit the prices to memory.

"We put about 50 items in the buggy," White says. "Then we went to the checkout stand, took the items out and scanned them, and I'd say the price and we'd see if my memory matched the Home Depot computer. And it did."

Actually, the story is more complicated than that. The store manager informed White that he was wrong on three prices.

"I told him: 'No, I'm not wrong! The computer is wrong! But he didn't believe me. Nobody believed me. So I demanded a price check on all three items,'" he says. "And all three times, I was right."

"So my memory is better than the Home Depot computer system!" Superhuman, indeed.